A FAIR SHARE PAIR

Lunchtime was over, but Yakky Doodle was practically starved. The reason that he was so hungry was because he hadn't eaten any lunch, and no breakfast either.

"Oh, dear me!" Yakky sighed. "My pantry is as empty as my tummy! How can I get some food? What can I do?"

Just then Chopper came to visit Yakky and he noticed the sad look on Yakky's face.

"Why so glum, little chum?" he asked.

"Oh, nothing!" replied Yakky. "I'm just a little hungry, that's all!"

"That makes two of us!" said Chopper. "I haven't had a bite since yesterday. I've used up all my buried bones, too, or else I'd share one with you!"

"Thanks, friend Chopper!" said Yakky. "I feel the same way! One for all, share and share alike, and all that!"

"You said it, pal! But where do we get some food to share?" lamented Chopper.

"I know! We'll knock on people's doors and ask for some," said Yakky, brightly.

"Oh, no! That's too much like begging!" protested Chopper.

"Then, we'll WORK for it!" said Yakky.

That was fine with Chopper; so they set off in different directions to see if anyone wanted some odd jobs done.

The first people Yakky asked about work were amused at the idea. "What could a little duck like you do?" they laughed.

But Yakky wasn't discouraged, and finally he found a lady who had lost an earring in her strawberry patch. Little Yakky Doodle was just the right size to look for it, and he gladly took the job. He poked around the strawberry plants and soon found the missing earring.

The lady was very pleased. "Thank you," she said, "and in payment, you may have all the berries you can eat. Help yourself."

Yakky was delighted, but then saddened as he thought: "Gee, Chopper doesn't eat strawberries, and if I can't share my food with him my conscience would bother me."

So he thanked the lady and walked away.

Meanwhile, Chopper found a job digging a hole to plant a shrub in; but to his dismay he was offered a big bowl of cream, which he refused for the same reason that Yakky had turned down the strawberries.

They met later that afternoon, hungrier than ever, and exchanged experiences.

"Golly, Chopper, you should have drunk that cream!" said Yakky.

"Aw, I just couldn't" said Chopper. "I made up my mind I wouldn't accept anything unless BOTH of us could enjoy it. Share and share alike, y'know, li'l pal."

"Right, big pal, even though we go hungry forever!" said Yakky stoutly.

Just then the tinkle of a bell drifted down the street. Yakky stopped, listening.

"Maybe we won't go hungry much longer," Yakky grinned. "You go back and say you've changed your mind about the cream, I'll do the same with the strawberries. Then we'll bring them over to my place. Hurry!"

Soon Chopper showed up with a big bowl of cream, and Yakky brought the berries.

"Just pour your cream in the ice-cream freezer!" grinned Yakky.

Chopper gasped, "Ice-cream freezer?"

"Sure!" replied Yakky. "When I heard the bell of an ice-cream cart awhile ago, it rang a bell with me! I don't care for cream alone and you don't like strawberries all alone; but if we put them together we'll get strawberry ice cream—something that we BOTH like!"

It wasn't long before they were stuffing their faces happily.

"My conscience doesn't bother me now!" said Chopper between gulps. "Does yours?"

But Yakky's mouth was too full for him to answer; all he could do was shake his head.
